AN ENDLESS CHAIN "IN HOGS."

[National Crop Improvement Service]

There are many plans of financing the pig club boy. Many banks are now ready to take the boy's note unsecured for both animal and feed.

In the endless chain plan a breeder or a bank agrees to furnish the female pig and agrees to take in return one or more pigs from the increase. The contract generally provides that the boy shall belong to a pig club and observe its rules and follow as far as possible the instructions and suggestions by the club leaders and to make all of the reports required. The man who furnishes the sow agrees to carry the risk of death from causes that are not due to negligence on the part of the boy.

The boy agrees to breed the hog when not less than eight months of age to a registered boar of the same breed and to raise the resulting litter under the same rules that govern the care of the sow.

The boy then agrees to give the man who furnished the sow first choice of all the little female pigs, and in case it is agreed to breed a second time during the year, a second choice is given at the age of eight weeks. These two pigs are then considered full payment for the original sow and the boy is entitled to all that he can make.

There are many variations in this plan. In case the sow pig is received by the club member at weaning age, two pigs from the first litter at the same age, or one from the first and the second, may be returned.

Weeds Eaten by Indians.

Many of our common weeds and wild flowers were used by the Indians for food. The Jack-in-the-pulpit was one of them. The Indians cooked and ate the root, and sometimes the Jack is, therefore, called Indian turnip. They also boiled and ate the red berries that the Jack shows in autumn.

Continuous Demand for Fruit Helps to Keep Up the Prices

Stability of demand for any product is a big factor in selling it at prices satisfactory to the producer. For this reason the Florida Citrus Exchange is constantly working to educate the consuming public to make continuous use of grapefruit and oranges.

All the advertising of the Florida Citrus Exchange stresses the food and health values of citrus fruits.

The literature of the Exchange and its demonstration work feature the many uses of grapefruit and oranges in the household.

This educational campaign is causing a seven-days-a-week use of Sealdsweet fruits which helps a great deal in securing good prices for them.

Join the Florida Citrus Exchange and market your fruit under the Sealdsweet trade-mark. For full details call on, write to, wire or 'phone
